The Healthcare Management Fellowship: Training Leaders for Tomorrow

Postgraduate administrative fellowships have offered an important transition from the role of student to practitioner for more than 30 years. Similar to many other types of field-based experiential learning options designed for master’s students and early careerists in the healthcare management field, these opportunities have numerous benefits for fellowship participants and sponsors alike. Fellowships allow recipients to experience the challenges and opportunities of running healthcare organizations from the 360 degree perspective of those at the top, rather than the narrower, though valuable, experience they would gain by working in just one department or unit after graduate school.

Fellowship sponsors also benefit greatly from having newly minted healthcare management master’s graduates join their organizations. By offering new graduates opportunities to be mentored by senior members of their executive team and rotating them through the organization’s various administrative units, these short-term commitments expose fellowship sponsors to the latest developments in the healthcare management field.
